The platform to be adopted by the Chicago convention, as well as the choice of by that body, is now giving the administration concern.

hand demanding that the platform shall contain revolutionary declarations squinting at a limitation upon the power of the courts, and enlightened sentiment opposing such declarations, certain members of the administration are actually beginning to show some alarm.

Perhaps, it is argued, a little more tact and diplomacy would accomplish more in the end than the hitting of heads with the big stick and the mangling of forms with the steam roller.

It was impossible to confirm the report coming from Chicago that differences of opinion had developed between President Roosevelt and Secretary Taft on the subject of anti-injunction legislation. The President was responsible for the earnest effort made during the closing days of Congress to place the House Republicans on record in favor of a law interfering with the constitutional prerogative of the Federal courts in the is suance of restraining orders and injunc tions. It failed, much to the delight, it was understood at the time, of men very friendly to the Presidential candidacy of Belasco Secretary Taft

Sheldon for Second Place.

As to the Vice Presidency, it's got to your choice." The name of a new candidate was sprung in Washington yesterday. George B. Cortelyou and Jonathan P. Dolliver continue to be favorites, although an announcement is soon expected from the Iowa Senator that his name must not be presented to the convention.

Representative Hepburn, of Iowa, one of the President's callers vesterday, contributed some interesting comment to the current discussion concerning the Vice Presidency. He did not know who would be placed on the ticket with Taft, but he the late Dr. Stafford, once a student at felt certain that it would not be Senator

"Despite all assertions to the contrary," said Mr. Hepburn, "Dolliver does not want the nomination. He is satisfied with his place in the Senate. We of Iowa want him to stay there. The party will have to go elsewhere for a candidate."

Secretary Cortelyou absolutely declined to discuss the subject of the Vice Presidency yesterday. It can be stated, however, that he is not an active candidate, and that no movement has been organized to further his interests. The second elective term, he said, was in fine shape, never better, and that it would get busy at Chicago just about the time Taft orators thought they were nailing down the nomination for the big Secre tary of War.
